He stressed the need to differentiate the University in what has become an increasingly disrupted sector, in line with our strategic plan as a world-leading capital city university.
6 that the Vice-Chancellor acknowledged the depth of feeling and affection for the name Victoria however his first duty was to the institution and that he was strongly of the view that the proposed name change was a fundamental step in ensuring the ongoing viability of the university and enabling the university to better achieve its potential.
7 that the proposed name change would help strengthen our international reputation, deepen engagement with our city and flow on to strengthening the student experience.

11 that nine Council members spoke in support with two members stating that they were opposed.

12 that the next step, should the vote support resolution 1, would be to write to the Minister of Education asking that the legal name of the University be changed from Victoria University of Wellington to University of Wellington; and that, subject to the Minister’s approval of a change in name to University of Wellington, that the University’s Māori name change from Te Whare Wānanga o Te Úpoko O Te Ika a Māui change to Te Herenga Waka.

He particularly recognised the diligence of Council members in reading all of the submissions and giving thorough consideration as part of their decision. He especially acknowledged the staff and student members of Council who had been on the receiving end of some unpleasant and unacceptable reaction. He also acknowledged the efforts of staff in handling the submissions and related workload and the efforts of the Vice-Chancellor who had also received personal criticism with regard to his advocacy for the proposed change.

Ravethi Jeyakumar, President of VUWSA International Students’ Association (V-ISA)

Kia Ora Members of the University Council, Senior Leadership Team and staff and fellow students,

Thank you for giving us the opportunity to present the international students’ perspective on the Fees setting Agenda 2020. My name is Ravethi Jeyakumar and I am speaking on behalf of all international students in my capacity as the President of VUWSA International Students’ Association (V-ISA).

As a student representative group with more than 300 members, we have actively ensured that the voice of international students is heard by the university. From our Fair Fees and Equitable Access to Scholarships for International Students campaign two years ago, our submission opposing the disestablishment of the University Hall last year and our stance opposing the name simplification proposal, we have taken into account the views of international students at Vic. While we believe in working with the University to provide the best support for international students, it is difficult to do so when the University does not reciprocate this.

In August 2016, V-ISA carried out extensive consultations with international students on fees hike, the inaccessibility and unavailability of scholarships. We received 100 survey responses from undergraduates, EPP students and postgraduates. We proposed 2 recommendations for the University: to put a cap on fees for international students and to make scholarships available and accessible for all international students.

We agreed with the university that fees has to be increased year by year due to overhead costs, inflation and upgrading. However, we disagree that the fees hike for international students has to be much more higher than domestic students. International students do not consume more resources than domestic students for every course they take so there is no basis for such a significant difference when International students are already paying approximately 5 times more than domestic students and yet our fees increase 4-5% on average (in numerical sums) per year.

As mentioned previously by V-ISA’s Vice President of Equity, Vaelyn Luo, the fees hike does affect the mental health and wellbeing of international students. From our survey in 2016, international students were not only finding it difficult to cope financially but have to struggle with the psychological stress from the lack of financial support provided as well. An overwhelming 60% say that their parents are willing to compromise on their savings to support them. It would also be interesting to note that a sizeable number of students have taken bank loans from their home.

Not only are international students not able to get a student loan here in New Zealand but they also struggle to gain employment in efforts of being financially independent from their parents as well. In 2016, Over 90% of the students who wanted to gain employment are struggling to find one.

In the event that students do gain employment, there remains a high risk of labour exploitation by employers as well. Based on preliminary findings by the NZ International Students Association’s experience survey, it is clear that 66.7% of respondents did not have employment contracts; education.govt.nz Page 3 of 4 0 17.4% of respondents paid below minimum wage, 21.7% did not know pre-tax payrate; o 59.3% of respondents experienced unjust treatment by employers.

There are a decent number of students who are working below minimum wage. Labour exploitation happened in our very own University accomodations, where students are paid wrongly . How are international students supposed to perform to the best to their abilities academically while struggling with such mental stress?

The University has stated that the best it can do is to be transparent and help potential students to foresee their expenditure. However, what students know is only the lump-sum fee they have to pay for the first year, not the unfair increment of fees they need to pay year on year. Moreover, not all students can predict their future circumstances. Some students who have approached us revealed that they are on the verge of dropping out because of family tragedies back home or that their bank loans are denied. There are little measures put in place to support them. It is important to consider that international students cannot get a student loan in New Zealand.

The other argument was that higher fees reflect better quality of education. In terms of overall teaching quality, Victoria University is the only New Zealand University that has not seen a rise in its QS World Ranking this year (2016). This may not be the best indicator around but it is the most direct and the most accessible indicator for students. In terms of scholarships, forget about the millions being pumped into this area.

While this has improved to 2 scholarships over the years with the International students can apply for two Victoria International scholarships that reward academic excellence. All students can apply for the NZ$5,000 and NZ$10,000 Victoria Tongarewa Scholarship. Students who have studied for at least one full year at a New Zealand secondary school can apply for the NZ$20,000 Victoria International Excellence Scholarship. There remains intense competition for scholarships with domestic students.

We also want to point out that there is a disproportionate number of scholarships provided to students who are entering their first year in Victoria. There remains the irony is that Victoria recruits a huge portion of international students through “twinning” programmes (degree-partnership with foreign universities); many of whom have already completed their first year of university in their home country. They are not eligible for any scholarships, based on merit or otherwise. 93% of international students have shown strong support for a tuition fee waiver scholarship. They want a percentage cut on their tuition fees based on academic achievements and financial needs. This will be more reflective of the costs international students are paying. Lump-sum awards simply do not account for the increase in costs that international students have to pay. V-ISA urge the University not to view scholarships as a recruitment tool, but an incentive to motivate students and help them to achieve their fullest potential.

V-ISA would like to emphasize the importance of taking international students’ views into account when making decisions that matter to their lives. International students are not merely consumers and university education is not merely a commodity. It is difficult to empathise with the position of every international student, but as long as an effort is made to engage us sincerely, Victoria will definitely be able to raise above the standards. Victoria should set the standards of quality education, not a simply taker of standards.

Priyanka Roy, Co-Vice President of the Postgraduate Students’ Association

My name is Priyanka, I am the Co-Vice President of the Postgraduate Students’ Association, and I am here today to speak in opposition of another fees increase.

Universities NZ states the following on its website regarding postgraduate education: “New Zealand offers a world-class education. All eight universities are ranked within the top 3% in the world.” This statistic gets a whole new meaning when we add the growing trend of deteriorating student health in NZ. The New Zealand Union of Students’ Associations commissioned the “Kei Te Pai Report” in 2017 in which it was revealed that tertiary students were failing to reach their potential because of the mental health crisis. The “Kei Te Pai Report” states that 56 per cent of tertiary students considered dropping out because of stress, anxiety and depression in the very first year of study. The rising cost of education (i.e. tuition fees) was shown to be contributing to financial stress to a “great extent” in 23.7% of respondents and “somewhat extent” in 30.3% of respondents.

Unsurprisingly, many students are upset at the increase in student fees. It is easy to see that the postgraduate education is a good source of revenue for the university, but the annual hike affects students—both domestic and international. It almost seems that Victoria University of Wellington functions in a way that calls for maximum fee increase every year, and no matter what the collective student body states, this arbitrary fee structure is not going to change. Also, the student involvement in the fee-setting process appears to be a nominal rather than real engagement.

Last year, the fee went up by 2 percent, student levy by 3.5 percent and student insurance by not so meagre increase of 25 percent! This combined surge leads to financial stress for postgraduate students who have limited resources. Students often set their budgets based on current student fees and are not prepared for rising expenses. They might not qualify for additional student loans. Many scholarships don’t increase even when student fees go up. Victoria Doctoral Scholarship was last increased in 2011 (that too by 11 percent!). Thus the students feel trapped in the vicious cycle of financial aid, hardship funds and loans to cover rising costs. No wonder, “depression and anxiety reported by postgraduate students are six times higher than in the general population.”

The PGSA receives a lot of queries from students who have been impacted by the increased financial burden. Many postgraduate students are part time, also working, have children, are returning to study – and many of these students that the PGSA deals with are ineligible for access to even student loan funding from the government. This means that fees are a great difficulty for them as it stands, and that any increase will certainly act to further deter potential students already struggling to cope financially. There is less support from the government in terms of funding like student allowances, which adds to their financial stress. Unlike undergrads, postgraduate students do not have access to StudyLink services. Therefore, balancing studies and work to manage the finances can take its toll. There can be no denial that many students who face undue stress opt out of courses or do not pursue further studies. The university earns a significant proportion of its money in the current funding model from international students – continuing to increase their already astronomical fees is not a sustainable income.

The reasons stated by the university for the increase in student fees—to maintain many existing services and manage operating costs—is comprehensible. But to increase fees to the maximum extent allowed every year is disadvantageous to a lot of students who may want higher education, but without the resources they choose not to.

Deciding to embark on a post graduate journey is an enormous commitment, and it is an important time in a student’s life when they want to specialise in a particular area, hone their skills and use them to contribute to society. But making courses so costly, and the early salaries being so derisively low, it can be detrimental to even take up the degree in the first place.

In 2011, an important study published in the journal Educational Evaluation and Policy Analysis projected a 0.25 percent decline in college enrolment for every $100 added to tuition. In a world where specialised degrees are increasingly becoming necessary, higher student fees can limit people’s access to good jobs. While fees are necessary in the tertiary education environment we operate in, encouraging stability and avoiding fee increases to the greatest extent possible would provide the greatest benefit to postgraduate students.

In today’s competitive world, a degree from a world ranked university like Victoria University is an advantage, and it’s an advantage many students like me would like to have. However, as universities keep raising their tuition fees, more postgraduates will find themselves discouraged at the prospect of high debts. The higher cost of knowledge is not without its repercussions on our culture, and now more than ever, the onus is on the universities to ensure that these students have done adequately well to make this investment worthwhile.

Therefore, here representing postgraduate students and the PGSA today, I would like to implore the Council to vote against increasing student fees.
