Academic Integrity and Plagiarism

Academic integrity is about honesty – put simply it means no cheating. All members of the University community are responsible for upholding academic integrity, which means staff and students are expected to behave honestly, fairly and with respect for others at all times.

Plagiarism is a form of cheating which undermines academic integrity. The University defines plagiarism as follows:

The presentation of the work of another person or other persons as if it were one's own, whether intended or not. This includes published or unpublished work, material on the Internet and the work of other students or staff.

It is still plagiarism even if you re-structure the material or present it in your own style or words.

Note: It is however, perfectly acceptable to include the work of others as long as that is acknowledged by appropriate referencing.

Plagiarism is prohibited at Victoria and is not worth the risk. Any enrolled student found guilty of plagiarism will be subject to disciplinary procedures under the Statute on Student Conduct and may be penalized severely. Consequences of being found guilty of plagiarism can include:

- an oral or written warning
- cancellation of your mark for an assessment or a fail grade for the course
- suspension from the course or the University.

Find out more about plagiarism, and how to avoid it, on the University's website: www.victoria.ac.nz/home/studying/plagiarism.html

Subject outline

Overview of the subject

This subject, the first in the EMPA, focuses on the essential management task of delivering value to the public. It is squarely based on the recognition that although it is possible to draw on concepts and methods from the private sector, public sector management is different in important respects. This involves neither rejection nor uncritical imitation of business techniques, but rather adapting them to take account of the differences.

The subject is loosely based on a strategic framework which conceptualises public sector management in terms of three different sets of factors, providing categories within which contending views of value, strategy and service delivery can be explored, drawing on a variety of theoretical perspectives. Each category is a public sector analogue of factors in play in the private sector:

1. the value created by the organisation (conceived more broadly than the products delivered by private companies, to include public as well as private value);
2. the authorising environment surrounding the organisation, that is, the political environment of formal and informal stakeholders who can give or withhold 'permission' and resources for what the organisation is doing, which is different from the market environment facing private firms;
3. the operational capabilities utilised in creating or delivering value, many of which are external to the organisation, with the manager having only shared or indirect authority over them. These capabilities can be analysed through the notion of the 'public value chain', encompassing all of the capabilities (both internal and external) available to managers for achieving outcomes in the public sector.

The first day and a half of the program (Sunday and Monday) canvas different ways of thinking about these issues in an overall strategic sense, then the following three days (Tuesday to Thursday) zero in on the operational capabilities, considering both internal and external ones. Here the aim is to provide an expansive view of the means for delivering public value. The subject goes beyond the assumptions of the traditional bureaucratic, managerialist and contractualist models of the last two decades, by positing a broader variety of ways of creating public value than simply internal production or external contractors, and a broader set of motivations for people to do so than simply money or punishment. The final morning (Friday) brings these concepts back together in a specific application of the strategic model, while the afternoon canvasses a wider concept of public value-creation.

Subject objectives

The objectives of this subject are that students will:

1. appreciate the different kinds of value created by public sector organisations for citizens and clients;
2. understand how the political environment affects organisational objectives;
3. be aware of the various kinds of operational capabilities available to public sector managers, and how they can be mobilised;
4. know how to recognise problems from symptoms, identify opportunities for action and manage risks in delivering value to the community;
5. enhance their skills in people and knowledge management, contracting, partnering and inter-organisational collaboration in the public sector;
6. be able to think strategically about delivering public value.

Educational format

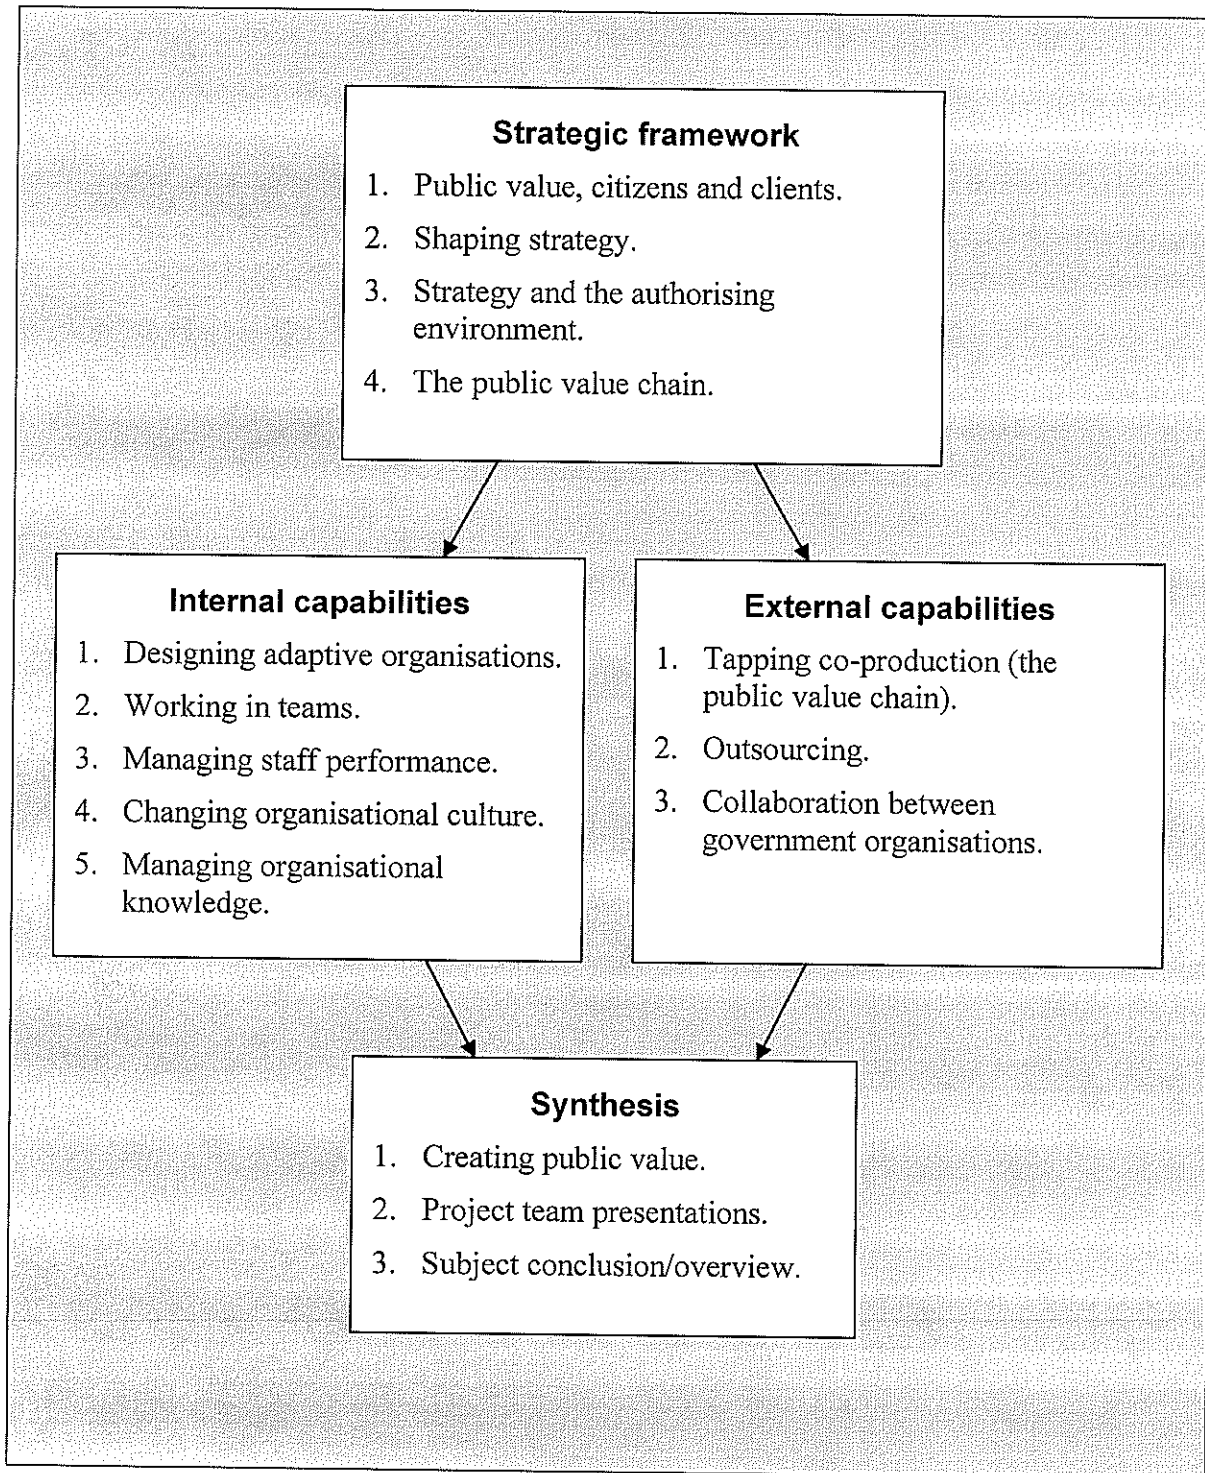

The subject will be taught intensively from Sunday, 3 February to Friday 8 February. It will utilise a variety of educational formats, including case study teaching, small group discussions, exercises and role plays, speaker panels and project team presentations. The program involves a lot of participation by students, which in turn means that it is important for students to read and prepare set cases and exercises.

Streams, syndicates and project teams

To maximise cross-cohort engagement and networking, each student will be in two types of streams and two types of small groups, as follows:

Streams

In addition to plenary sessions involving the entire cohort, there will be two streams of 60+ each. These will be known as Streams 1 and 2.

Syndicates and project teams

All small groups will comprise 5 or 6 students. Each student will be a member of two types of groups, mixed differently:

1. Syndicates will meet at times scheduled in the timetable, and work on preparation tasks for specific sessions, such as case questions. They will be mixed between jurisdictions, agency types, occupations and genders.
2. Project teams will meet as agreed among their members during the program, and will work on developing the presentations to be made on the morning of Friday, 8 February, as well as on the project assignment after the one-week intensive. Project teams will also have a mixture of diverse types. In particular, they will be designed so that, after the intensive week, they operate on a virtual basis, i.e. they are spread across multiple jurisdictions.

Notification

You will be notified of your streams, syndicates and project teams upon arrival at the program on Sunday, 3 February.
