

Surveillance and Privacy in Aotearoa New Zealand

This course introduces contemporary debate about surveillance and asks to what extent New Zealand might be considered a ‘surveillance society’. Who is under surveillance, what data is collected, by what means and for what purposes? Discussion about national state surveillance (past and present), the era of ‘big data’ and the role new technology plays in ubiquitous consumer monitoring will help you answer these questions and to consider why privacy matters, even if you have nothing to hide.

Kathleen M Kuehn is a lecturer in media studies at Victoria University. She is currently working on a book for BWB Texts about mass surveillance and privacy in New Zealand.

6pm-8pm, Mondays 20 July to 24 August (6 weeks)
Fee: $180 (Early Bird Fee $162)

For further information or to enrol visit www.victoria.ac.nz/conted
or call 04-463 6556.

